Have you ever jumped off the top of a one story roof before? I have. It's a long way down.

This man has the nerves and skills to scale partially down the side of a commercial building, find footing on the outside wall, and jump down to the ground relatively uninjured.

Can you see the bolt action rifle in this photo of the shooter escaping? I cannot see it.

(Begins crouching tiger, concealed identity)

This is a trained assassin.

Crouching, aware, concealing.

Crouching, running, concealing.

Can you see a rifle? I cannot see the bolt action rifle in any of these images.

Crouching, running, concealing.

Crouching, running, concealing.

Still escaping in professional form.
(Retains training in time of pressure)

Crouching, running, concealing.

Still maintaining crouched and concealed form all the way thru the grassy knoll.

Rifle, that I cannot see in the video of the getaway is actually being carried with the assassin as he scales the wall immediately after the shooting? (Did he break down the rifle only to re-assemble it? No.) (Was the barrel of the rifle sticking out of the backpack? I can't see it.)

The bolt action rifle (same style as Lee Harvey Oswald)(note the grassy knoll getaway connection) contained engraved shell casings.

Engraving shell casings. Personally, I associate engraved shell casings with people who are very enthusiastic about weapons and ammunition (like veterans and trained military killing machines.)

For the record of special winks and nods, I have an engraved .50 caliber shell casing in my home right now. Do you?
